These books are only available from Native Child, Inc.

Native Child, Inc. is republishing the first ever written and illustrated bilingual readers. For the first time since the 1940s, these booklets are made available again to the schools in their original bilingual version, illustrated by the leading Navajo artists of the twentieth century. Some are also collected and translated by Robert Young and William Morgan. These bilingual picture books are too beautiful and too historically significant to be forgotten – they describe and illustrate traditional Navajo ways that have been slowly disappearing in the last 65 years, since they were first printed at Phoenix Indian School.

We have also started to republish the bilingual Navajo Historical Series (originally published by the US Indian Service in the fifties). They were created with the help of Robert W. Young and William Morgan. The stories given by the Diné people are told in their own words – just as they told them in Navajo, and then were translated into English. Native Child, Inc. has left the original version untouched and then expanded it with texts, photos and illustrations that give the student and teacher an even better understanding of conditions at the time. And best of all, history comes alive and will be a pleasure to study.

All books are printed on demand.
